

Please help me, I do not want the FCC to implement any proposal that would in any way decrease Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. Before this law was passed in Indiana, I would receive up to 10 unwanted phone calls per day trying to sell me something. And, perhaps the most frustrating of those calls came from companies (e.g., credit cards) with whom I already did business and were trying to sell me some other service. I often work out of my home office, and such unwanted calls really disrupted my ability to get my work done. However, this problem has virtually disappeared since Indiana's Telephone Privacy law was implemented.
